SHEDS NEW LIGHT ON URBAN GROWTH

Writer Makes Point as to Drift in F. M. Farms.

That the urbanization of the United States has not run its course, as is commonly supposed, is indicated in a recent issue of the Current History, which deals with the city problem in a comprehensive manner.

Admitting that the drift from the farms is taking place, the writer, however, holds that more urbanization is necessary in the future, and that the increase in the urban population will exceed that in the rural population. This is based on the growth of the cities, which has been steady and continuous.

Many places formerly classed as rural centers, have more than 5,000, or have passed into the "urban" classification. This has happened because their population now exceeds that of the surrounding area, and is likely to continue. Therefore, it is not to be expected that there will be any marked migration from the countryside.

Between 1920 and 1925 about 4,800,000 new urbanites have passed into the city classification. The city's large capacity of receiving the greater part of the nation's population should be increased to 100,000,000 to keep pace with the present increase.

Many other factors contribute to this trend, such as the rising cost of living, the development of new industries, and the desire for a better standard of living.

Candida Pomerene

Cleveland, O., Plain Dealer

Nation wide interest attaches to Alice Pomerene's announcement that she is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senate. It is widely recognized that her prominence has contributed to the national campaign. She has a combined force of support which is undoubtedly the largest in the country.

Her political career has been built on the foundation of an unswerving record of integrity and loyalty. She has always been true to her principles and has never wavered from them.

Her personal character has been tested and found to be beyond reproach. Her honesty and integrity in business and in public life are beyond question. Her personal integrity is her strength.

If the Democrats of Ohio want him on the November ballot, as many have desired, they now have the opportunity to vote for her. The opportunity is clear. The task of carrying the Progressive banner must rest on her shoulders.

English Dogs in Demand

At present about 30,000 dogs are employed in the dog industry, directly or indirectly, and the value of the pets is estimated at nearly $1,000,000. Every dog has his duties, but the most important one is that of bringing homes to the best of their ability.

Photography Tips

The bureau of statistics of the International Exhibition describes the photography of a steamer and its photographs. It does the work well and does it well. The photographs are superior and are considered good. They have been excellently made by individuals.

These two dogs, selected by the judge of the most beautiful and scientific articles, are described on the exhibition site. The exhibition continues until December 1.
