Worker Risk Death in Effort to Rescue Miners

By Howard G. Mayer

Workers were placed in considerable danger yesterday as a result of the efforts of the followers of the Vera Cruz rebels to rescue the miners trapped in the San Simon mine. The miners were digging for gold in the mine when a wall of water was washed in upon them, carrying away most of the miners except two. The two remaining miners were dug out by the rebels and taken to safety. The workers are now working under very difficult conditions to save the other miners who are believed to be trapped in the mine. The death toll is expected to rise.

Every day is a time possible it is obviously to be shown as winners and risk takers. They really believe in the stock market, and we do nothing during the next few days and every possible solution within their reach.

The campaign is fast drawing to a close, only three days remain in which to work. At the close of the campaign on Wednesday, they will count the final vote and receive their awards. Some of them, instead of receiving 10 per cent commission on the amount, may receive 20 per cent on the entire subscription to The News. Several subscriptions were signed last week on the campaign, and are expected to be signed during the contest and some subscriptions are still coming in from some of the contestants when the final count is made. It behoves every contestant in the race to pick up the last few days of the contest count.

The campaign manager is perfectly honest and cordial, and when we saw that no contestant can feel reasonably sure of a prize at this time, the winner of the first prize is as much in insurmountable as any other contestant, and it is an established fact that the willer of the big prize, as well as the smaller prizes, will be decided by the way they work from this week. Several thousand names have been collected during the previous round of subscriptions and the wide awake ones, the men and the women, the one who desires to get a prize and is determined to get it, have had to work hard and work hard this week and plan to make Friday, October 1st, the winning night of the campaign.

The campaign has been going on as planned, and the results from the different contests are not as good as we had anticipated. Contestants are urged to make a thorough canvassing of their immediate territory, and by the time the campaign is over, there will be no doubt that the last day's votes will average much better in the campaign.

All candidates will redouble all their efforts to come through on their part. They have been working hard, and all the assistance which their friends will render them will make their work easier.

The campaign has been very successful, and the results will show that the contestants have only been waiting for the last few days to win the grand prizes.
