AMERICAN PRESIDENTS

Of one hundred presidents of the United States, only one ever owned a farm. That was President Abraham Lincoln. In the year 1856, at the age of thirty, he purchased a farm in the state of Illinois. He named it the "Sangamon Farm." It was a typical farm of that period, with fields, barns, and outbuildings. Lincoln worked on the farm every day, milking the cows, plowing the fields, and raising crops. He even raised chickens, which he sold to local merchants. Lincoln was a good farmer, and he enjoyed the work. He once said, "I love the plain, unadorned life of a farmer. It is a life of discipline, of hard work, and of contentment."

The Patience of Patricia

By RUBY DOUGLAS

How did they happen to call her Patricia? I can’t imagine. Is it some resemblance to Pavlova? No, it is not a possibility at all. I suppose, since I am a professional, that this is the only reason...Patricia was a famous dancer, you know. She had a great reputation.

For two reasons...she replied musingly...for two reasons. First, because I am a dancer, and secondly, because I am a princess. What do you think of that, my dear? Don’t you think it’s a great advantage to be both a dancer and a princess?

You see, I am a great believer in the importance of Patience. I have always said that to be a good dancer, you must have patience. And to be a good princess, you must have patience. It is the one quality that all great dancers and all great princesses have in common.

Patience is a virtue, my dear. It is the key to all success. Without patience, you cannot achieve anything. You must be patient with yourself, patient with others, patient with life.

So, as you can see, I am very patient. I have been patient all my life. And I will continue to be patient for the rest of my life. I will never give up, no matter what the circumstances. I will always try to do my best, even if it means suffering.

I will always try to be patient, even when I am tired, even when I am hungry, even when I am cold. I will always try to be patient, even when I am angry, even when I am sad, even when I am alone.

And that, my dear, is why I am such a great dancer and such a great princess. I have patience, and I have determination.

Thank you, my dear. For your patience and your understanding. I will always be grateful to you.
