Our Postal System

BY MRS. A. G. GROOMES

in the state of California, and also in New York and Alaska where there are few railroads. Uncle Sam sees that the people both see and hear the country outside of these states. The post office system is also a great business. The Postmaster General is the highest government office in this country, and the Postmaster of any city is the highest government office in that city.

The Postal System was established in 1792. At that time it was only a local system, but it has grown into a national system. Today, the Post Office Department serves more than 300 million people in the United States, and it is one of the largest and most efficient government agencies in the world.

The post office department also makes maps. Post route maps of states and cities are published, and maps of postal codes and other mail routes are also published.

The post office department is also responsible for the delivery of mail, and it has a network of post offices throughout the country. The post office department also issues stamps, and it has a network of post offices throughout the country.

If you have any questions about the post office system, you can contact the U.S. Post Office Department at the address above.
